An aerial photograph of a coastal town built on a steep hillside. The town consists of numerous white, multi-story buildings with flat roofs, some featuring balconies. The buildings are densely packed in the lower part of the hill and more spread out as they ascend. In the foreground, a large, rugged, light-colored rock formation dominates the lower right. To the left, the town meets a dark blue body of water, with a small white building situated near the shore. The background is a massive, steep, rocky cliff face with some sparse vegetation, illuminated by warm, golden light. The overall scene is a dramatic landscape of a coastal settlement.
